Professor Frederic Tupper Explains Purposes of the New Movement.

Most important of Vocations.

"It is now generally agreed that the teachers' profession is by far the most important of all the vocations. It is so intimately connected with the complete development of the childhood, the youth, the manhood of the nation, that it is natural that only those centuries in which the teachers' profession is most favored and cherished can hope to win in the fierce competition of the world. It is the work of a deep thinker and a profound logician who would take the battle of the France-Prussia war to the very heart of the German minister.

"The paramount importance of the teachers' profession being once acknowledged, the inevitable corollary follows that it is the duty of the State to make the teachers' truly professional body, thoroughly equipped with the necessary knowledge, skill, task, and completely united in the patriotic endeavor of securing the best attainable results for the nation.

"Other educational associations have shown that a more specific knowledge of whether such work is restricted to social subjects or is expanded so as to include states should be compensated. The speaker of the House, Carl Albert, said that the speaker of the Senate's official organ to champion the cause of the interests of the great profession of teachers, to bring before the public existing conditions, to emphasize the knowledge and need of improvement, to furnish legal advice on questions of law, to aid in bringing about the passage of legislation to improve the status of the teacher, and to furnish an open court for the discussion of all educational matters, would be a most desirable one to members of the League.

It must be noted, however, that the teachers' union cause is the prime motive in any successful attempt to win for them the status of a profession. As the speaker said, "The teacher is not a profession, but with much truth that teaching is a noble and honorable profession, a fact which is only too often forgotten by those who are not teachers in the United States and Canada."

TAFT AND SHERMAN OPEN GOLF SEASON

President in First Game Since Taking Office; Runs Even With His Rival.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 27.—President Taft and Vice-President Sherman, Captain A. W. Hall, the President's aid, and General Cannon, Sherman's capt, in a golf game on the Chevy Chase golf links this afternoon. This is the first time the President has had since his inauguration.

The President hit the white house for 2 strokes and began the game shortly after arriving at the links. He had a hard day's work at the White House before getting out, and felt the necessity of a day's good exercise. In just time he intends to give more time to golf.

Today was ideal for the sport. A late spring temperature made it a pleasant day. The President's game was a very close one. Sherman was a very good golfer. Sherman has admitted that he is not the best golfer in the world, and has even gone so far as to admit that he is not the best golfer in the world. MEMBERS OF DUDLEY CLUB TO TAKE PART IN MUSICAL COMEDY

"The Alderman" to Be Best Musical Comedy Produced by Organization.

The members of the Dudley Club have decided to produce a musical comedy for their next season. The Alderman, which they will present at the Dudley Street Opera House Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and the production promises to be the best ever given by the club.

"The Alderman" is a musical comedy in two acts filled with the atmosphere of the new track. The hero being a famous boxer who is in love with the daughter of "The Alderman." The whining of the Brighton Beach bandy by the hero, who has the sum on the nose of "The Alderman," is the feature of the production and the crowd that marvels a clever plot.

The music, by William K. Halliwell, is bright and catchy, and the book and lyrics by George V. C. Lord, are decidedly clever. Every member of the club has been working with a dash and swing that promises to carry off the comedy in a highly successful manner from the time it opens at the Dudley Street Opera House. Ladder.

Haverhill, March 27.—As the result of a family quarrel, in which a husband threw a lamp, a man died from burns. The wife, now in hospital, was rescued from home by human ladder.

The woman declared after the fatality that the man was in a serious condition at the hospital. It is thought she will live.

Only Candles on Altar.

It has been decided by the Sacred Congregation of Rites that the altar should be lighted by candles only. There is never to be used for theatrical effect, but merely for lighting the church.

High mass must be sung in every parish church of the diocese on Sunday and holy days of obligation throughout the year. In summer there and simple music will reduce the time required.

All expensive pomp and elaborate altar display should be discouraged at funerals.

Hereafter no "clogs" will be permitted at funerals without the consent of the archbishop.

FUNERAL EULOGIES BARRED BY CHURCH

The discommendation of electric lights on the Catholic altar and of religious funeral masses, except in cases where special permission is granted by the archbishop, are rules now in force in the Boston archdiocese.

As a result of the Sacred which was held recently at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross, the pastors of the parishes of the archdiocese are carrying into effect the new decrees for funeral services, as approved by Archbishop O'Connell, who presided over the synod.

Some of the features of the new regulations follow.

LET US TELL YOU WHY

we have spent thousands of dollars to maintain the trademark and property rights of the name Mt. Vernon as applied to whiskey. It was to protect you against imitators and infringements, and the object of this advertisement is to more fully impress upon your mind the fact that

The Round Bottle is the Original and Genuine

back of which is the unanimous and final decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, determining that we were the prior adopters and users of the name Mt. Vernon as applied to whiskey.

We also want you to know that the advertising of the so-called Mt. Vernon whiskey in the square bottle was given to certain Boston papers with orders not to insert on days that our advertising might appear.

This infringement fears honest competition. It continues to use the name which the court of last resort on trademark appeals found was first adopted and ever since has been used by us, thereby taking advantage of our reputation of over 150 years, built up on the Mt. Vernon trademark.

Imitators without rights of course have no rights to lose, and can well guarantee that their "so-called" rights are unimpaired.

But what value has such a guarantee? Do you as a dealer or consumer wish to take any chances on it?

Torrey's Old Mt. Vernon Rye in the ROUND bottle is the original and genuine—and we shall jealously guard our rights at any cost.

It's the safest and best whiskey to buy for all occasions. Accept no substitute. Insist upon it of your dealer. If he does not have it, phone us, Richmond 770.

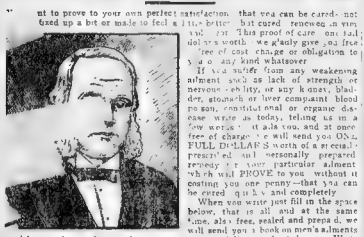

Full quart bottles. Never sold in bulk. Proof regulated under government supervision.

VIM VIGOR VICTORY

Sincerity.
No coward ever led a host to honor and to glory,
No shirker ever gave the world an all-enduring story,
No cheating builder ever reared a temple to the ages,
No self-deceived man ever wrote his name in history's pages.
It isn't what you do that counts, it's how you go about it;
You can't expect the world to take your measure if you doubt it.
It isn't brain alone, or brawn, or power of arrival,
Beyond them all, pre-eminent, is power of survival.
The don't fear man, the sincere man achieves where others falter,
A doubter never laid a wreath upon success's altar.

While Your Grit Lasts, You Will—BY HERBERT KAUFMAN

He didn't know that he could do it—he wasn't sure that he'd win—he heard the sneers and he saw the smiles of incredulity, but they didn't stop him—he believed in himself, and went ahead. Occasionally he fell down, but every bruise was an investment—it was a record of one of the wrong ways—every scar was an asset which showed him that he could survive, even if he was knocked over occasionally.

He's the man who wasn't content with candle light and went snooping around until he managed to perfect a lamp, and after he had the lamp, he yearned for more light—he kept yearning for it until he discovered gas. But even gas wasn't pervasive enough, so he harnessed up electricity.

He wasn't praised at the start—the man who tries never is. One of the penalties of being greater is to run up against the grating envy and lashing skepticism of the "little folk." But it takes a lot more than an insult or a cold shoulder to chill the real winning impulse.

If you expect to be coddled and cheered—if you're looking for approbation and encouragement—if you haven't stamina enough to stand alone with your ambitions and to fight for them till you attain them—you're wasting dreams. It's one thing to believe in a theory and another to believe in yourself. Being brilliant is only half of the game—being brave is the other half. The road to the laurel grove runs up the side of a cliff: There are spots where you'll have to hold by your finger tips but if you're not willing to take the risk you don't deserve what's up top. The cowards are all down at the foot—so many of them that they have to fight harder and suffer more for the right to exist than a plucky man pays for the great big rewards.

There was a time when strength decided greatness—when the strongest arm and the longest wind made chieftains, but the tourney is no longer the tilt-yard. For untold centuries the greatest brutes were the greatest men—the thinker and the dreamer were weaklings. The same instinct that then sent their clubs swinging at the physically weak still survives. They don't understand—they never did understand—you can't expect them to share in your visions. They must touch things, feel them, see them, measure them—all their senses are physical, and so until they see you higher than themselves they won't place you where you belong.

You'll have to pay for wanting more, or being more, or having more. They'll tear at you—they'll wear on you—they'll block your way and hold you down until you gather force enough to squirm away from the under-crowd.

You'll never suffer so much as when you're getting the least—you'll never need your confidence half so badly as when you doubt yourself most.

You'll have to be brave in the dark—dogged and purposeful. You don't need wealth or position. The want of things creates the impulse to attain them. Farm houses have bred more giants than middle-class competency. The man who comes up from bedrock has a heritage that is priceless. He knows that going back to bedrock will still give him a chance to start anew—that poverty cannot ruin, but merely check, and so he risks more and has less fear than those who have been set upon the middle rungs of the ladder at the outset—whose imagination pictures the loss of money as the loss of everything.

Come on and keep on—take your time and take your lickings—take everything that belongs to you—don't sell out to cowardice. When your grit has gone—you're done with—while it lasts, you will.

MAN LOST ON PEAK NOW LEGALLY DEAD

STATE HOUSE NEWS OF REAL INTEREST TO COMMON PEOPLE

By A. Political Sharpe

WILLIAM B. BROWN, of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, has introduced a bill to amend the law relating to the death of a person who is lost on a mountain peak. The bill provides that if a person is lost on a mountain peak and is not found within a certain period of time, he shall be deemed dead for all legal purposes. This bill is of great interest to the common people, as it will settle the question of the legal status of a person who is lost on a mountain peak. Easter 1909—And We Still Worship Idols

GHEY have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto.—Exodus. XXXII. 8

Another Easter season comes around, centuries have passed, with preaching, reforming, urging—but the golden calf, in one form or another, is still in fashion. There he sits in the picture, changed to a golden monkey just now, enthroned above the multitude. Look at him! You can't deny that at this Easter season, 1909, the money monkey has his millions and tens of millions of humble worshippers.

Progress seems to be dimly slow, and there's little comfort for the man who forgets that what we call a century is less than an hour in the long development of the race, and that the nineteen hundred years that we look back on in our era are but a brief moment in those millions of years that men are destined to spend on this planet.

The Jews under Moses, discouraged, anxious for something that seemed to them definite and worth while, could not keep up the mental effort of worshipping an abstract divinity so "all the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them to Aaron."

Aaron made the golden calf. Thanks to Moses, that offensive idol did not long flourish. Moses was a persistent reformer. "He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the Children of Israel drink of it."

That was a good punishment for the Children of Israel. Voltaire, of course, gets excited about that text, and denies that it was possible by any chemical process for Moses to burn and grind up gold and dissolve it so that the Children of Israel could drink it.

But there is no doubt that Moses DID it, somehow—he did a more wonderful thing when he got water out of the rock.

He was stern, attended constantly to his duty as a reformer, and he saved the Children of Israel, temporarily, at least.

If he could come back at this Easter season he would find us, four thousand years after his death, worshipping a brand new golden monkey instead of the old calf, with no sign of anybody able to grind it up and make us all drink it. He would surely be depressed.

All of our wonderful achievements, our skyscrapers, our subways, our flying machines and our many other improvements on his Land of Canaan, could not drown his sorrow at the sight that would meet his eyes here.

In Lent, and out of Lent, at Easter, Christmas, the New Year and July Fourth, the money monkey sits firm and dominant on his throne. He stares insolently at the churches, and says, "They worship ME six days, and think of me on the seventh." He sneers at the empty libraries, watches with a stolid, solid grin the hurrying, rushing, nervous, fighting throng. "They are all struggling to serve me," says the money god of money.

A sad comment on the greatest country, the greatest republic and the people that BELIEVE themselves to be the greatest nation!

Where are the men that have power in America, and WHO are they? Are they the thinkers, the men of intellect?

Are they not, rather, the big men that sit in the shadow of the money god and use his power to control everything?

Doesn't this money monkey make you laws? Do your legislators or any of your servants ever get far from his influence? Don't they all run when he beckons? Or, if a man turns up that fails to follow the crowd, isn't he laughed at, sneered at as eccentric? And doesn't the money monkey always say to himself—nearly always truthfully—"I SIMPLY HAVEN'T PAID HIS PRICE YET, BUT HE HAS HIS PRICE, AND I HAVE IT. I SHALL GET HIM IF I WANT HIM."

How many men are there among the millions in America who can truly say that the idol in this picture isn't their idol? This is the god of wealth, of quick money success, self-indulgence and passing power.

This is the money monkey whose favorites can have whatever they want in this world. They can go to Europe and get the finest pictures, or stay at home and have the best things brought here. They can put thousands of men at work as their slaves on the most economic basis—that of WAGE slavery.

Willingly and loyally, desperately and permanently, millions serve this idol. They enter his service when they are young, they stick there usually through lives of bitter disappointment, and they are still serving faithfully and painfully in their old age.

Every type of citizen belongs in the ranks of this idol's worshippers. He drives the poor into his service by the pressure of want, and the rich serve him most ardently of all from habit—the passion of possession.

Lucky the man who can free himself from the control of this ruler. Lucky he who has a RIGHT to look down with contempt on those poor, ignorant Israelites in the desert, turning away from divine truth to worship at the feet of the dull golden calf.

There is, however, an encouraging side to everything. This money monkey IS a ruler. Nine-tenths of all the energy and thought in the United States are devoted to his service. Ninety per cent of all the able men are working for him, and they are working FOR HIM ALONE, with no thought beyond what the monkey idol has to give.

But as they work, as this money monkey sits aloft, looking down on the nation, changes are going on. As the Jews in their despair were steadily nearing the Promised Land, so the rushing, struggling, scrambling crowds that we call civilization steadily, though with painful slowness, are nearing the time of better conditions.

Men struggle desperately, they serve the god of money faithfully, because some—the majority—have always been poor. And all struggle NOT to be among the poor; they trample one another down to get to the top.

But the struggling NEED NOT ENDURE ALWAYS. There's thought in the struggle, growth and constantly increasing power.

The worst features of the abominable social system silently fade away.

We have WAGE slavery, but we no longer have slavery of the BODY.

It has been said that a young girl tending a loom can clothe twelve hundred people. That means that, when men's intelligence and benevolence WILL IT, the naked will be clothed, and MACHINES run by independent, well-fed men will clothe them.

Every dress once represented fingers worked to the bone with the needle. That is necessary no longer.

The struggle for money and power goes on in the crowd below the money idol. But as the years pass it is not so vile or sordid a struggle. Anxiety and want exist, but starvation is practically unknown; the plague and the lash are gone, and much of the hideous devilry that once passed current under the stamp of religion or law has disappeared.

Nearly all of the people, almost all of the time, forget their ideals, struggle basely, simply for profit. But SOME are thinking, and even the dullest, most selfish, have flashes of inspiration.

There is an upward movement for the man that will see it. This money monkey will probably sit safe for a long time. He smiles as he watches the selection of trusty ministers that will serve him in the Cabinet of the United States.

But his smile will not always last, and HE will not last always. In time the real Moses—the CONSCIENCE AND ASPIRATION OF THE HUMAN RACE—will do for this idol, once and for all, what Moses did to the old calf made of the Israelites' earrings.

This monkey will be torn down in years to come—far away from now, perhaps, that time may be—and the Easter season will find men worshipping JUSTICE, which includes all of the virtues—the divine justice that will be supreme one day, as it should be, ON EARTH AS IT IS IN HEAVEN.

Oh, Winnie!

VERSE BY CAROLYN
WELLS

1 "Why, goodness me!" said Winnie Wynne, "to-day's the very day
That Cousin Mary will arrive; she's been so long away.
She's fetching us some Paris clothes; the steamer's due at three;
I'll go to meet her at the pier, and bring her home with me."

2 The pier was very crowded, there was bustle,
noise and din,
And waiting was a weary woe to winsome Winnie Wynne.
"I'll just go through," thought Winnie, "for I do so hate to wait."
"Stop, miss!" the officer exclaimed. "You can't go through that gate!"

5 "Oh, can't I!" saucy Winnie said: "you stop and think a while!"
And carelessly she lunged at him a made-in-heaven smile.
And then she flung another. What did that strong man do!
He nearly broke the gate down in his haste to let her through!

4 Said Cousin Mary, "We'll declare your Paris hats and frocks!"
"Oh, a ton't know!" said Winnie, sitting in the nearest box.
Just then the customs man came 'round, demanding all their keys.
And said to Winnie, "If you'll rise, I'll look through that box, please."

3 But Winnie Wynne was thinking of what was in those trunks:
That smile of hers just bubbled up and tumbled off in chunks.
The dazzled young inspector was a fabbergated quite.
And said, "Not open these! Oh, no!" Of course not, ma'am—quite right!

6 He didn't open any trunk of Cousin Mary's right.
Still dazed, he followed Winnie Wynne clear to the very gate.
The officer who'd let her through was staring,
pugle-eyed.
Each thought, "I risked my job for her!" and both hearts swelled with pride.

HOW TO COLOR YOUR EASTER EGGS

The Easter Egg Patterns on this page are printed with specially prepared inks. You can easily transfer the designs in colors to the Easter Eggs by following the directions given herewith.

How to Color the Easter Egg.

First boil the egg hard. Then cut out the patterns printed on this page, carefully following the outside lines. Select any design you wish transferred to your Easter egg and wrap it around the egg, with the printed design toward the egg. Carefully tie the egg and pattern in a small piece of damp linen, pressing your hand on it for a few moments. Then remove the linen and paper pattern, and you will find the colored design has been transferred to the egg shell.

"I am not disturbed in the least," answered the King. "I am not without reason of my own. I am disturbed and in great deal of secret. You must not as plainly expose to the manner in which Miss Min-nely will come to the knowledge of the King as she shall have him and his about our ears in no time."
 "You would pleasantly, and with a shade of mental superiority," said the King, "say that I am disturbed," and then burst up in a different sort of confusion. We know how to manage these affairs.
 "The old Ludwig, still," said
 the King, "with Miss Minnely in an unpleasant position I prefer to stand out of the way altogether."

THE LIFE OF MAN WHO CAN'T KEEP AWAY FROM AN ACTRESS

By Dorothy Dix.

CHACKERLY'S famous dictum that any woman can marry any man she wants, provided she hasn't an actual bump on her back, ought to have a modern amendment to read—especially in this case if she is an actress.

Of course serious minded men fall in love with actresses and marry them all quite properly and happily. But why do married men love their heads in the presence of actresses while the rest of womankind do not upset their usual balance?

About the daughter of the intelligent house a mystery and fatal fascination that few men seem able to resist, and they go down before her like ripe wheat before the sickle. Calver Johnson stood in line by the stage door for the privilege of seeing a star pass to her automobile, and send bouquets of orchids, with jewels hidden in them, to dressing room doors. Happy he, and envied among his fellows, who can hire a box at the theatre and point to the third apartment in the second row of the chorus and boast that he has a knowing acquaintance with her.

This phenomenon of the obsession of man about the actress is beyond accounting for. It is merely to be recognized as a fact. It is all the stranger because actresses are not, in reality, the flowers of their sex. Far from it. With her wig off, her make-up washed off, and the habiliments of every day living substituted for the fluffy ruffles of the stage, the average actress is no whit better looking than the ordinary domestic woman. She is even less interesting and companionable for the stage life. In the narrowest and most egotistical existence on earth, and it is the exception, rather than the rule, to find an actress who either knows or cares for anything but the little tattling of behind the scenes, or who can tear her thoughts long enough away from her own genius and how she "faded on up" at Oshkosh to even consider anybody or anything else.

Nevertheless, the actress has only to smile and crook her little finger and the sons of Adam get up and follow her where she likes. This would not be so curious if only the juvenile dopes and the gay old rascals about town were allied by the painted faces of the stage, but when men, stout, hard-headed, practical business men are not immune to that glamour, either. They also fall before it.

A man may be a deacon in the church, and a pillar of society. He may be as domestic as the house cat, and apparently content with the kind of a wife and children that Providence has vouchsafed him, when here comes along some perky little actress, who gives him a glance out of the corner of her eye and a smile over her shoulder, and, voila, the man is done for.

She held it fast behind part before, and he sees all life crosses. His wife becomes a clog upon him, all her virtues, and sacredness, and hard work for him are forgotten. His children, formerly his heart, are strenuous little brats. His home, that he had once thought comfortable and attractive, is unbearable. He begins to think longingly of dives and to speculate about how little money he could live his wife off with. And all for the sake of a woman he has never seen when he goes to think, must tell him in staid of his sphere of things, and with whom he has nothing in common. It is the never to be explained attraction of the flame for the moth, and in the world where just isn't done as often as it should be it is a comfort to know that the moth generally gets it.

Two curious examples of this morbid fascination that the actress has for men is afforded by the suits for divorce that have been brought against their husbands by two women, one of whom actress Emma Eames, and the other Miss Kellermann, of having broken up her home. Here we have the two pieces of evidence that the great grand opera and the almost naked Australian woman, with her equally dressed, a famous baritone singer and a playwright man, but the result is the same. Each man is under the spell of the woman of the footlights and best his duty to his quiet, up-to-date little woman living under the drop light of his home. Madame Gersony says that she worked for years before to make her husband the great artist that he is. When he was poor and obscure she pinched and complained, she talked over his shoulder, and at the piano, playing over and over again his accompaniments, which pained for weary years, and he loved her and appre-

PLANTS SCIENCE LATEST MOSQUITO BY DENE BACKE

SET a plant to catch mosquito? This is the very last idea for getting rid of the pest.

The problem being worked out just now on two lines of these has been taken up by the state, and the plant with which they are making the experiment is called the Azolla, or "water lentil." It is a modest little plant, with multiple of thin leaves, of a green color, which float on surface of still, fresh water.

You have often seen pillwort growing, and have noticed how "Yuck" float on the water. Well, it is the same way with the leaves of this plant, which are not far from the surface, only that they are very tiny and spread by the billions, where a considerable area of water-space is covered when. Unlike pond lilies, however, these tiny plants are not in the bottom, but simply float on an anchorage whatever.

Under favorable conditions, such as are afforded by any still pond or marsh, a quarter of an inch diameter, nearly round, and of a particularly brilliant green color, which float on surface of still, fresh water.

trial trials with the Azolla. A number of experiments of greater or less size were picked out for the purpose and planted with the "water lentil." As a result, the water lilies were soon covered with a continuous layer of the plant two inches or more in thickness, and was found that they produced no more mosquitoes. Such "traps" were hatched in them but did not get at it. There is no net or mesh among the leaves wherein the pupae are her on. And, even if she could do so, the "water lentil" would be a waste of time. This will presently be explained in greater detail. But, as the German Government, it is to say, the Colonial Department at Berlin, contemplating the introduction of the "water lentil" in the German colonies, with a view to eradicating the mosquito, which is a great pest in those regions. Experiments looking to this end have been in progress during the last few years, under the auspices of the Institute for Tropical Hygiene, and under the direction of Dr. Hartmann, a scientist of high reputation.

The facilities of the State Botanical Institute having been placed at Dr. Hartmann's disposal, as well as those of the Institute for Tropical Hygiene, he has proposed the "water lentil" on a large scale, choosing as the scene of his experiments the neighborhood of Wilhelmshaven, where, as it happens, there is a "malaria" station. In that vicinity there are numerous stagnant waters and swamps, infested by mosquitoes, which are accountable for a widespread prevalence of malaria.

Here, then, it was thought, was a first-rate opportunity for conducting experiments.

The end of about seven days they change their form considerably, becoming pupae, and forty-eight hours later they are ready to leave the water and assume the winged shape.

This is the danger point in the life of the mosquito. Coming to the surface, it carefully extricates itself from its pupa skin, which serves as a little raft for it to stand upon, and then it is obliged to wait for a little while it dries its wings and gets ready to fly. The moment is one of peril, because the least breath of air, rippling the surface of the water in little waves, will sweep the raft and drown the tiny prisoner. But, if all goes well, the wings are soon dry, and then the mosquito flies away.

The mosquito pupa is a very aquatic animal, and it is not at all difficult to keep it in water. And the water must be still, and the pupa must be kept in a shallow dish, so that it can be seen. The pupa is a very aquatic animal, and it is not at all difficult to keep it in water. And the water must be still, and the pupa must be kept in a shallow dish, so that it can be seen.

as is formed by the "water lentil," the female lies in vain for a place to lay her eggs. And if, by and by, she does discover an opening among the leaves suitable for the purpose, she is obliged to wait from the egg will, as already explained, find it impossible to push their heads above the surface, and get the air they require for breathing.

Finally, then, is the reason why the new method adopted for eradicating mosquitoes, which belongs to the genus Utricularia. The long Latin name means a little bag, or skin, and has reference to the way in which the "traps" with which the leaves of the plant are furnished are constructed. They are in truth traps, being designed for the capture of small animals.

Like the "water lentil," the bladderwort is a floating aquatic, it is entirely devoid of roots, and is propagated by winter buds in a very curious fashion, the buds sinking to the bottom and germinating in the spring. The leaves are of skeleton form, and to each one of them two or three of the bladder-like traps are attached. Each trap has a valve-like door, with one free edge, so that it is easy for a small aquatic animal to enter, but practically impossible to get out again.

If it be a question of setting a plant to catch the mosquito, the bladderwort may be said to fulfill this function admirably. One fine out of ten of the little bladders are found to contain mosquito "traps" or their remains. Such larvae show signs of life for twenty-four, or sometimes thirty-six hours after being imprisoned, and then perish—whereupon they are directed by the green plant to sink to the bottom.

A full-grown leaf of the bladderwort looks like the skeleton of a leaf, terminating in twenty or the long, thin, green, tipped by a small greenish-yellow point.

On the other hand, the "water lentil" propagates itself, renewing its growth from year to year and flourishing throughout the mosquito season. All that is necessary is to throw a few of the little plants into a pond, and they will do the rest, multiplying through a curious process of self-division, in which one tiny plant splits up into many.

The same problem is being attacked in another way, in this country and in Europe, through experiments with a very interesting plant called the "bladderwort."

small creature in search of food or protection. The valve, or door, is remarkably transparent, and it may be that the spot of light reflected from it serves as a sort of bait. The important point, however, is that they do go in, and cannot get out again, great numbers of them being thus captured and destroyed.

A plant that might serve as an auxiliary in fighting the mosquito is the modest little "sundew," which is frequently found in marshy places. Its leaves are of a spongy, cushion-like form, and are covered with an arrangement of tentacles, each of which bears on its end a tiny, sticky, transparent, sticky fluid. The drops of this fluid, glittering in the sun, have given rise to the name "sundew" upon this humble member of the vegetable kingdom. But, though humble, it is a very cunning creature, and its tentacles are so sensitive that they are able to detect the slightest touch, where it is digested at leisure, being in a literal sense devoured.

THE mental malady which caused Nebuchadnezzar, the great King of Babylon, to "eat grass as the oxen" and to behave to "us an extraordinary parent, mother, wife, and friend," is a malady which has been known to afflict kings and emperors of all ages and of all nations. It is recorded in the Bible that King David, King Manasse, King Zedekiah, King Ahab, and King Nabuchadnezzar were all afflicted with this malady. It is also recorded that the Emperor Nero, the Emperor Caligula, and the Emperor Tiberius were all afflicted with this malady. The image is a composite. The top half features a reproduction of a painting, likely by Paul Delacroix, depicting the Tower of Babel. The scene is dramatic, with a massive, craggy stone structure rising from a rocky landscape. Numerous figures are shown in various states of activity on the tower's surface, some appearing to be in conflict or in a state of panic. The sky is dark and stormy, with swirling clouds. The painting is framed by a decorative border with a repeating geometric pattern.

The bottom half of the image is a black and white photograph of a modern archaeological reconstruction of the Tower of Babel. The structure is a large, rectangular, multi-story building with a flat roof and a series of terraces. It is surrounded by a low wall and a path. The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the building. The image is framed by a decorative border with a repeating geometric pattern.

"This hat is, perhaps, as remarkable and effective a creation as will be worn in New York this spring. The wide flare of the brim and the very low position of the hat on the head conceal the hair—one of woman's chief natural adornments—and it is, therefore, a hat which none but a rarely beautiful woman would have the courage to wear."

Should Wives Always Confide in Their Husbands?

By a Young Wife.

"I am a young wife, my husband is a very handsome man, and I am very fond of him. I have been married for two years, and I have never been disappointed in him. He is a very kind and loving man, and I am very proud of him. I have never seen a man who is so good and so kind as my husband. I am very happy and contented with my life, and I am very grateful to my husband for everything he has done for me."

as wrong in the home, it is a wife's duty to be a good wife and a good mother. She should be a helpmate to her husband, and she should be a mother to her children. She should be a woman of good character and good habits, and she should be a woman who is worthy of her husband's love and respect. She should be a woman who is true and loyal, and who is always ready to sacrifice for the good of her family.
